The Housing-with-Care Task Force

- Reducing the need for institutional care
- Keeping people healthy and out of hospital
- Freeing up homes for people of all ages
- Securing investment in the UK’s social care infrastructure
- Providing high quality care services
- Tackling the loneliness epidemic by boosting social connection

ARCO (Associated Retirement Community Operators) is the representative body for private and not-for-profit providers of housing-with-care in the UK. Housing-with-care schemes are also known as extra care housing, retirement communities or retirement villages providing care and support.

During Covid-19, the imperative to grow the housing-with-care market in the UK has never been stronger - ARCO and its supporters are calling for the formation of a cross-governmental Housing-with-Care Task Force to:

1) Identify barriers for growth
2) Provide detailed proposals for change building on existing work, including on:
   - Smart regulation of the sector (including consumer protection)
   - Clarifying the role of housing with care in the planning system
   - Availability of funding for those with more moderate means

The value of and widespread need for more housing-with-care has been well demonstrated by the way the sector has kept residents safe and shielded (yet still socially connected) during the coronavirus pandemic, reducing the strain on the NHS and social care systems.

This is in addition to the very high standards of personal care delivered, with 97% of CQC-registered domiciliary care agencies run by ARCO members rated Good or Outstanding.

Housing-with-care in the UK is still a relatively new concept, and supply is very limited compared to other specialist housing or care options for older people.

"Extra care housing can promote the health and wellbeing of older people" and has the potential to "play a greater role in providing social care alongside homecare and residential care".

Housing, Communities and Local Government Select Committee report on housing for older people, 2019.

"Housing-with-care (or extra care housing) has a vital role in enabling older people to live independently, with the necessary care and support available if required."

Helen Whately MP
Minister of State for Social Care
A blue-print for cross-governmental collaboration on ageing?

The Government is already committed to helping people live five more healthy years by 2035, which will require cross-departmental cooperation. The Housing-with-Care Task Force can serve as a model for how cross-governmental strategic engagement on this wider issue could be delivered in the future.
The coronavirus pandemic has shone a light on our social care system and forced us to reflect on the settings in which we can best provide care and support to older people. Housing-with-care has shown during the outbreak that it can help residents to self-isolate independently, while still ensuring the highest levels of support from staff through care, meals, regular phone check-ins and a wide range of online activities. Even if we reach a point where the challenges of coronavirus are reduced, this combination of security, independence and social connection should lie at the heart of our new ways of thinking about social care. More broadly, housing-with-care brings a range of great benefits to older people and our country as a whole:

- Fixing our social care funding crisis: Providing social care for those with lower-level needs costs £1,222 (17.8%) less per person per year, and for those with higher-level needs £4,556 (26%) less.

- Boosting health and the NHS: By improving the physical and mental health of residents, costs like GP, nurse and hospital visits reduce by 38%. £5.6bn in cost savings will be made for health and social care if 250,000 over-65s live in housing-with-care by 2030.

These benefits have been clearly demonstrated during the coronavirus outbreak. The provision of care, meals and support onsite has played a key role in keeping residents well and healthy. Housing-with-care has been central to cutting hospital admissions, reducing strain on the NHS and providing crucial step-down capacity once people could leave hospital.

Housing-with-care is increasingly filling the provision gap once occupied by other sectors.

- Average UK ‘lifespans’ have increased from 75 in 1987 to 81 today, but average ‘healthspans’ have not. Many of these additional years are spent in ill-health, with over four million (40%) of over-65s having a limiting long-term health condition.

- In the last 30 years, social care provision has also changed beyond recognition. Geriatric hospital beds have been largely phased out – seeing a 60% reduction between 1987-88 and 2009-10 – while residential care homes and nursing homes now provide high-level care, compared to the low and intermediate levels of care provided in 1987. The average length of stay in a care home is now 18 months.

These changes have created a ‘provision gap’ for those needing lower to intermediate levels of care as and when required – the housing-with-care option. In comparison to 456,000 care home beds and 444,000 retirement housing units, there are only around 70,000 housing-with-care units.

ARCO’s Vision 2030

ARCO’s members have set themselves the target of giving 250,000 people the opportunity to live in a housing-with-care setting by 2030 – up from 75,000 today.

To help achieve this, ARCO’s Vision 2030 identifies 10 priority areas for action. Most of these will be delivered by the housing-with-care sector itself, but the following three require government action, ideally via the Housing-with-Care Task Force:

- Sector-specific legislation
- Clarity in the planning system
- Flexible models of tenure

The housing-with-care sector is growing, and has seen the entry of large scale, institutional investors such as Legal & General, AXA and Schroders.

But to reach our Vision 2030 target of 250,000 people by 2030, supply levels will need to increase from approximately 2,700 units per year to 12,200 per year. Getting to these levels would mean the UK still only provided a housing-with-care option to 1.7% of over-65s - a third of the levels seen in other countries.
The transformative impact that lies ahead

If our Vision 2030 targets are met, the great social and economic benefits highlighted in the box below will be brought about.

But 2030 is not the limit of our aspirations. If by 2035 – when there will be 16 million over-65s in the UK – we have reached New Zealand’s level of housing-with-care provision, the UK can expect to see £234bn of investment in our sector, including the usual multiplier effect that would flow through to creating growth and productive jobs around the UK.

1 Currently about 75,000 people live in Retirement Communities

2 In the next 30 years the number of over 75s in the UK will DOUBLE

3 Our sector’s vision is to provide for 250,000 people by 2030

4 In achieving this our sector’s turnover will be over £70bn until 2030 and we’ll need to invest £40bn by then

5 This will deliver £5.6bn savings for the UK’s health and social care systems until 2030

6 And release over 562,500 bedrooms into the general housing market

A non-existent policy framework

Housing-with-care is not defined or specifically regulated in the UK, and is therefore non-existent in care, planning, housing or consumer legislation. This means the housing-with-care sector is currently ‘borrowing’ legislation and regulation from other sectors.

In other countries supply is much greater due to clearer regulation. In the UK only 0.6% of over-65s have the opportunity to live in a housing-with-care, compared to at least 5% in New Zealand, Australia and the US14.

Key pieces of regulation in these countries are:

- In New Zealand, the Retirement Villages Act 200315 sets out a legal definition of retirement villages, regulations on how operators can set them up, and details of the rights of residents living within them.

- In Australia, state-based regulation such as South Australia’s Retirement Villages Act 201616 and the New South Wales Retirement Village Act 199917 solidify the rights of residents and their relationship with operators.

- In the United States, almost all states define and regulate ‘Continuing Care Retirement Communities’ in state law (e.g. the Continuing Care Retirement Communities Act 2004 in the District of Columbia18).

- In Canada, the Ontario province has in place the Retirement Homes Act 201019, which cements the legislative rights of older people living in retirement settings.

Investors say the presence of a clear regulatory and legal framework “helps build consumer confidence while simultaneously providing longer-term certainty to operators and investors”20. In New Zealand, five of the 15 largest housebuilders are housing-with-care operators, including the largest.

The Task Force would not need to start from zero, and could draw on and distil existing analyses and recommendations, including:

Housing, Communities and Local Government Select Committee:

“Consideration should be given to introducing a legislative framework for extra care housing to bring together regulations relating to the provision of housing, care, and other support services.”

House of Lords Select Committee on Intergenerational Fairness:

“The Government should issue guidance clarifying that extra care retirement communities fall within the C2 use class as they are capable of delivering high levels of care to older people and so should be treated as the same planning use class as care homes.”

Law Commission:

Developed a Code of Practice for the regulation of event fees that contribute to the funding of housing-with-care, which “protects consumers from demands for fees imposed by unfair or hidden contract terms,” “limits the circumstances in which event fees may be charged” and “imposes clear obligations on landlord/operators”. This could be expanded to include all fees in a comprehensive set of consumer legislation.

Ministry of Housing, Communities and Local Government (MHCLG) report on event fees in retirement properties

“Standardise the language used to describe the nature and type of (event) fees”, with “all adverts and marketing material to use a common format to indicate (event) fees and/or how they are calculated.”

County Councils Network and District Councils Network

Suggested policies including a new planning use class for housing-with-care, and a framework for collaborative arrangements in two-tier local authority areas.

Age UK

Local authorities and housing associations need capital and revenue funding to extend the provision of specialist retirement housing with care, and particularly extra care housing.

ARCO

Developed a self-regulatory Consumer Code, and is currently working on a consolidated Code to be approved by the Secretary of State.

ARCO

Working to develop new tenure models for the housing-with-care sector beyond the leasehold system.
About ARCO

The Associated Retirement Community Operators (ARCO) is the main body representing the housing-with-care sector in the UK. We support more than 40 private and not-for-profit organisations to develop and operate high-quality Retirement Communities.

These communities are distinct from both care homes and retirement housing, combining self-contained homes for sale, shared-ownership or rent with 24-hour onsite staffing, CQC registered domiciliary care and a wide range of communal facilities. Retirement Communities promote independence for older people, provide exceptional care for those who need it, and act as hubs for the whole community.
